We've mentioned in the past that Reddit \(site link\) is our favorite learning tool time waster and we've always enjoyed having a mobile-Reddit option. The web site is a massive collection of user-submitted stories, pictures and news where "Redditors" can up-vote or down-vote what they like. Going deeper, there are s sub-reddits for specific topics. It's a hilarious, often witty community where we often do learn a few things (as well as being entertained--hello F7U12)

Unfortunately, some of the past apps have not gone "Mango", which is a shame as fast-app switching, Live Tiles, notifications, etc. all seem very useful things for such a website. Now Quinn Damerell has made a dedicated, Mango app called 'Baconit' (the title itself is a bit of an inside joke). In development for sometime, Damerell has made quite the killer Reddit app in our opinion. No doubt he learned a thing or two interning at Microsoft last year (we hear he's also returning to join the Windows Phone team--big congrats!).

We've been running the beta for awhile now and the full version just went live in the Marketplace. The app is free, which is amazing

- Full Mango Support
- Message Inbox with background updates
- Unread Message / Karma Live Tile
- Pinning of SubReddits and stories [Bug: fix coming in v1.4]
- Endless SubReddit browsing
- Fast App Switching / Multitasking
- Local caching of all data
- Easy voting for stories and comments
- Logical browsing and reading of comments
- Commenting support for stories and other comments
